

Other ways to promote UV safety during the month of July (partially adapted from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services):

- Post skin safety tips near major entrances for your colleagues to read before stepping out into the sun.
- Ask a health professional (a dermatologist, registered nurse, etc.) to demonstrate to colleagues during an educational event how to check skin regularly for skin-cancer warning signs.
- Create computer screen savers featuring a UV safety theme, which encourages skin cancer screening, staying out of the sun between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., using sunscreen with SPF 15 or higher, covering up with long sleeves and a hat.
- Provide promotional items, like small containers of sunscreen or sun visors, featuring nurse line phone numbers and reminders to get skin cancer screenings at any events your site is sponsoring this month.
